

Understanding Humankind Through Gesture

Benjamin Lewis of the American Sign Language program at the University of California, Los Angeles, is passionate about 'flying hands'. Fluent in not only ASL, but also Japanese Sign Language and New Zealand Sign Language, Lewis is fascinated by watching not only deaf people in different parts of the world as signers, but humans in general, who also use their hands to communicate with others through gestures. This talk was given at a TEDx event using the TED conference format that was independently organized by the deaf community.

\(Click here\)

(11 ½ minutes long)